The Goodman Case. nductor Goodman, who killed Colonel Parsons at Clifton Forge, is to have a new trial, Circui.-Judge McLaughlin having so decided.

Judge McLaughlin has been many years on the bench, and is learned, thorough, and conscientious in the discharge of his duty, and there will be few to question conclusion that the trial-judge's rulings were erroneous in several important particulars. So we take it that Goodman is clearly entitled to a new

But we question the policy of that law which allows a prisoner accused of a capital crime to choose whether he will be tried in the county court or circuit court, and when he elects to be tried in the county court gives him an appeal to the circuit court, and thence, if he falls in the circuit court, to the Supreme Court of Appeals. All the chances are in his The Commonwealth has no right of appeal at all.

Had Judge McLaughlin denied Goodman's prayer for a new trial, Goodman could have appealed to the Supreme Court, And all this he could have done without risk, as under our law Goodman cannot hereafter be convicted of any degree of murder greater than the second degree, the maximum imprisonment of which the

To-day the great mass of the people of both cities are more heartily in favor of consolidation than ever before, and the more they think about it the stronger will their opinion grow.

It seems to the Dispatch that there ought to be no difficulty in arranging terms between the two cities-that is to say, if the conferrees who are to be appointed shall be men who really wish to advance and not retard the scheme. We cannot be too careful in selecting conferrees. They should be intelligent, cleareaded, practical men; men who will not allow petty personal interests to stand in the way of the general good.

As soon as possible after a consolida tion bill is passed by the General Assembly we want to see plans laid for building a great, wide avenue across James river to connect Richmond and Manchester; an enue laid out upon granite arches spannodate half a dozen street-car lines at large. and hundreds of vehicles, and to carry all the gas-pipes, water-pipes, and electric wires that we may need for "Bigger Rich-represented in all future census reports. Closure in the Senate

The most interesting subject now be-fore the House of Representatives is the bill reported from the Committee on Rankies Banking and Currency on Monday to provide a new system of banking and a now method of supplying the public with a faultiess currency. And seeing that it would be impossible for any bill to be forced through the Benate so long as that body has no rule in the nature of a previous question.

new system of banking and.
Therefore, whether the little of se bills is to be the lake of the repeat, of great importance, use without it the banking through the Senate, and the banking and currency bill is of greater importaters threaten to come upon the country. The closure resolution pending in the Senate is Mr. Hill's, and he seems to be regarded as its foremost advocate. On Puesday he spoke in its favor, but not for the first time. The Albany Argus, which may be pronounced the leading Democratic paper in his State, made a week or two since the striking remark that "no closure means legislation by compromise." This remark was intended but we are not certain that it is not an Senator Hill used almost exactly the same words in his speech of Tuesday. He said that the continuation of no ure, or, in other words, no legislation without the consent of the minority. Mr. Hill also declared that inability to stop debate was destructive of the right ed of rates for more space furnished nd power of legislation.

The arguments in favor of a closure rule appear to us to be unanswerable. Therefore, it seems to us to be the duty of the Senate to adopt a closure rule without delay. It ought to be in full force before the bill from the House Banking and Currency Committee is sent to the Senate. But all House bills, or, as to that matter, all other bills, will be in like condition in the Senate. It is said truly that the people cannot express their will speedily, so long as the Senate has that they cannot make their will effective at all. The Senate custom or rule ilso renders powerless the House of Representatives. In fact, no-closure in the Senate is no-closure in the House of Representatives; for to have a previous question in one body and unlimited debate in the other is a mockery of the popular branch of the national Legisla-

The closure proposition is not a party measure. Senator Daniel, of Virginia, and Senator Hill, of New York, leading Democrats, join hands with Senator Hoar, of Massachusetts, a leading Republican, in advocating it.

The Sugar Question.

No Security to Depositors. Mr. Carlisle was last week reported in the papers es having said before the Banking and Currency Committee of the House of Representatives that his bill made provision for securing depositors against loss It was rote-holders, no doubt, and not depositors to whom he had reference; for in the House of Representatives on Tuesday last, when Mr. Smith asked Mr. Springer what provision if any had been made for the protection of depositors, Mr. Springer replied that it was a currency measure, and was not intended to interfere with the regulations for the security of national-bank depositors found in other parts of the nationalbank act.

There is nothing else so much ne as a law protecting depositors, who always have it in their power to make a run upon the banks and in many cases the ability to break them. Security and elasticity are what we should value highest in any banking and currency scheme. We have only one of these in the Carlisle bill, if Mr. Springer is right.
